The Tablet PC is Transforming...

Rehabilitation

One field that tablets are becoming more common in is the health care industry.

Here are three reasons tablets are being used as rehabilitation devices:

1. Simple, Accessible Technology

Tablets have become the perfect medium for delivering personal, easy-to-use self-rehabilitation. All tablets use an icon-based user interface that is visually appealing and simple to understand.

2. Brain Rewards

The brain's ability to repair itself and develop new neural connections is especially important regarding stroke survivors, whose neural networks may be damaged. A game of Sudoku or Memory will flex your cognitive muscles in the short-term. Research continues to see if "brain training" games actually translate into long-term improved skills. That said, there is certainly no harm in playing them so long as you are having fun. Challenging your mind is a great way to stimulate neural activity. Games hinge on a concept called the regime of competency; basically, the "material should not be too difficult or too easy, but challenging enough to build new neurons and strengthen the ones that already exist," says a professor of learning services at the University of Wisconsin.

3. Find Your Voice

One serious type of brain damage is known as aphasia, which is difficulty in speaking or understanding phrases. The boom in medical apps has resulted in many assistive communication apps that can give survivors a voice and help them regain their own. One of the most popular apps is Proloquo2Go, which gives users the ability to craft sentences using visual tiles.

The Education Industry

According to Apple, some 600 school districts have already ditched textbooks in favor of iPads. — One principal says "Textbooks are pretty much outdated the minute they're printed and certainly by the time they're delivered."

Incoming UCI medical students to receive iPads loaded with first-year curriculum — Education — Traditionally, first-year medical students are awarded white coats to signify their entry into the medical community. But at an Aug. 6 ceremony, each member of the UC Irvine School of Medicine's incoming class of 2014 will find a surprise tucked into the coat's pocket: an iPad tablet computer loaded with everything necessary for the first year of course work. The iMedEd Initiative calls for eliminating the classic lecturer-passive listener model and putting everything students need to succeed in class at their fingertips.

The Tablet PC is Transforming...

The Health Care Industry

Tablet use in health care often starts with a physician buying one for personal use and then discovering health care applications. But larger-scale efforts are under way to use tablets in the health care system:

- Kaweah Delta Health Care District in Visalia, Calif., owns more than 70 iPads, and more than 60 doctors use their own. They are used to look at x-rays and electrocardiogram results, and for home health care workers to access monitoring programs. It plans to have more than 300 iPads in use within a few months.
- The Orthopedic Surgery and Rehabilitation Dept. at Loyola University Medical Center in Illinois purchased tablets for all residents, and it later expanded the program to include attending physicians. They are using iPads to access drug reference guides and electronic medical records. Some surgeons are using them in the operating room to access reference tools.
- Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., handed out iPads to all its surgeons, who are using them in the operating room and the hospital wards to access up-to-date patient information such as lab data, CT scans and x-rays.
- Stanford School of Medicine in California started a pilot program of giving iPads to all incoming students.
- RehabCare, which operates skilled nursing facilities in 43 states, deployed iPads throughout its system for use at point-of-care.

Paperless office is now a dream come true!!!

The Tablet in its relatively short lifespan has managed to remove quite a few tons of paper from quite a few workplaces & and other places.

Even more important than her most welcome cheerfulness, is her ability to diagnose and explain solutions. We obtained a ClearSounds CSC600D phone yesterday, and encountered several puzzling problems during installation. We couldn't make headway with them, but Margo solved them with clarity. Thanks!"

Power and UPS Systems

Short for uninterruptible power supply, a power supply that includes a battery to maintain power in the event of a power outage. Typically, a UPS keeps a computer running for several minutes after a power outage, enabling you to save data that is in RAM and shut down the computer gracefully. Many UPSs now offer a software component that enables you to automate backup and shut down procedures in case there's a power failure while you're away from the computer.

There are two basic types of UPS systems: standby power systems (SPSs) and on-line UPS systems. An SPS monitors the power line and switches to battery power as soon as it detects a problem. The switch to battery, however, can require several milliseconds, during which time the computer is not receiving any power. Standby Power Systems are sometimes called Line-interactive UPSes.

An on-line UPS avoids these momentary power lapses by constantly providing power from its own inverter, even when the power line is functioning properly. In general, on-line UPSs are much more expensive than SPSs.

We sell and install UPS systems of all sizes to protect everything from individual work-stations to network switches. We proudly feature APC, Liebert and other brand name products.
